Ross Kay was the author of The Go Ahead Boys and the Mysterious Old House (1916), The Go Ahead Boys in the Island Camp (1916), The Go Ahead Boys and the Racing Motor-Boat (1916) and The Go Ahead Boys and Simon's Mine (1917). "When the greatest war in the history of mankind rages in Europe it is not only natural but right that every one should be interested. History is being made every day and heroism is displayed, unrivalled in any previous conflict. In this book the author has striven to chronicle some of the valorous deeds and to relate some of the incidents and events that are part of the everyday life of the soldier who is fighting in France. It has been his aim to present the story devoid of sensationalism and to weave nothing of the impossible into the tale. Most of the episodes are founded on fact and while the book is not historical it has its inspiration from actual happenings. " The illustrated history is presented of an early 20th century U.S. Army aviation squadron on the United States - Mexican Border during the Mexican Punitive Expedition of 1916 - 1917. The squadron's history is special. It was the first time that a U.S.Army aviation unit served in a military campaign. The squadron's personnel, aircraft, equipment, and facilities are presented, as well as a special operation that the squadron fulfilled for General John J. Pershing's Punitive Expedition. In addition, the eighty-four pilots who served with the squadron at this time are identified, and summary biographies are presented for the forty squadron identified in chapter photographs. This book immerses the reader in the early life of the oldest U.S.Air Force squadron as it spreads its wings for the first time in combat. "The building of Featherston Military Camp in late 1915 transformed a stony paddock east of Featherston township in south Wairarapa into a ready-made barrack town which could house up to 8,000 raw soldiers. Volunteers and conscripts from all parts of the country came to Featherston, spending two to four months in training, our largest military base their temporary home before they left the safety of New Zealand to endure the heaviest casualties this country has suffered. ... Safe haven traces the life of Featherston Military Camp and the men who lived there. The camp left a legacy in buildings, photographs and the site itself, now quiet land alongside State Highway Two, east of Featherston"--Back cover. In 1906, the North Carolina state legislature established Camp Glenn as the permanent summer training camp for the North Carolina National Guard. The camp's chosen site, located three miles west of Morehead City, was ideally situated on a sandy stretch of firm, high, and well-drained land overlooking Bogue Sound. A large parade ground adjoined the camp, and it was level as a floor and could accommodate the entire North Carolina National Guard. Although it was first established as a target practice field, in later years, the camp became the first US Coast Guard air station and later a US Navy base. Camp Glenn was the mobilization site for National Guard troops sent to the Mexican border during the 1916 Punitive Expedition against Pancho Villa led by Gen. John J. "Black Jack" Pershing. Citizen soldiers who trained at Camp Glenn also fought in World Wars I and II protecting North Carolina's coastline and battling for the United States in Europe. Excerpt from The Messenger, Vol. 14: November 1916 Plattsburg having met with such a success, a few interested people began to plan a boy's camp, founded on the same principles, only adapted to the requirements of boys. Accordingly, last January a group Of school principals and other interested people met to discuss this camp. At this meeting arose the question of a site. Where would the camp be? Major General Wood, who was present, made a suggestion that did much to turn the camp from an amateurish attempt into a perfected plan carried out by experts. How about a coast artillery post? He said. How would you like to take the boys to Plum Island, for example? Immediately every one grasped this Offer that solved the question of where the camp should be. This wholly military island, with its fine opportunities to get close to military ways was ideal. Therefore, on July sixth, the boys landed on Plum Island in droves. The wharf was strewn from one end to the other with grips, suit cases, and trunks. We were lined up in two single columns, and as we gave our names to a man at a large desk, he assigned us to our respective companies. When we had gone to our companies and our names had been taken again, we were free to roam about the island until supper time; or, as it is called in the army, mess. About eight o'clock we were all formed in the company street and placed according to height. We were then assigned to tents, eight men to each; and, as it was about time for taps, we all set about making up our cots. As the work was entirely new to us, we had some pretty poor specimens of bed-making. The real work, which began the next day, was as follows. At blew the most cruel call of the daily programme - it meant only fifteen minutes to attach the various habiliments of a soldier and turn out for roll call and calisthenics. These occupied twenty minutes and consisted of exercises for every muscle of the body. Often a short run down the road was included, to work up an appetite. The book chronicles the extensive training and heroic service of the New York National Guard's 104th Field Artillery Regiment from the period of 1916 to 1919. The regiment, initially called the 1st Field Artillery Regiment, served as border patrol in Texas during the Mexican Punitive Expedition in 1916, and trained at the gunnery field at La Gloria, Texas. During World War I, they trained by the Glassy Mountains at Camp Wadsworth in South Carolina, and then at the School of Fire of Camp de Souge near Bordeaux, France. Because of this extensive training, elements of the 27th Division were splintered off and placed within a number of other divisions. The 52nd Field Artillery Brigade, under which the 104th Field Artillery Regiment served, was attached to the 33rd Division as their artillery, and then the 79th Division for the entire Meuse-Argonne Offensive near Verdun. Using field diaries, photos and letters, their story of courage under extreme conditions including enemy shelling and gas is recorded and their memory preserved.
