Carr tells the story of the noble lighthouse from its earliest history to details of the 1999 relocation of the treasured landmark. For now, North Carolinians have succeeded in protecting their lighthouse as it has protected thousands of sailors for over a century. 32 halftones. Maps. "H. H. Cunningham's Doctors in Gray, first published more than thirty years ago, remains the definitive work on the medical history of the Confederate army. Drawing on a prodigious array of sources, Cunningham paints as complete a picture as possible of the daunting task facing those charged with caring for the war's wounded and sick. Of the estimated 600,000 Confederate troops, Cunningham claims the 200,000 died either from battle wounds or from illness—the majority, surprisingly, from illness. Despite these grim statistics, Confederate medical personnel frequently performed heroically under the most primitive of circumstances and made imaginative use of limited resources. Cunningham provides detailed information on the administration of the Confederate Medical Department, the establishment and organization of Confederate hospitals, the experiences of medical officers in the field, the manufacture and procurement of supplies, the causes and treatment of diseases, and the beginning of modern surgical practices." - Print ed. A book of differential comparisons. The book shows how one might use remedy comparisons in one's daily practice. The remedies are arranged alphabetically. Program for the meeting. The story of one family's preoccupation with passing on depicts the humorous bickering between the elders about their private arrangements to be buried in the popular town cemetery. Excerpt from Transactions of the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina: Forty-Fourth Annual Meeting, Held at Morehead City, N. C., June 8, 9, and 10, 1897 Death, won't you please go out and get in the apple tree and wait till I get ready and get my hair fixed 7 Oh yes, madame. So he went up the apple tree and could not get down, and there was no death. Men sought to be killed in war and by poison, but there was no death. They searched for death everywhere, and finally a medical practitioner found Death and tried to put him down. Notice was sent to the King, and the old lady said she would never permit death to come down from that apple tree, that she was perfectly willing for him to go to anyone else, but she wanted him to keep his hands off of her. So death came down from the tree, and that is why he is in the world to-day. History tells us that Napoleon in Egypt, after capturing the people to keep them from fighting, he sent for his surgeon and said: I want you to poison these men. I can see the grand look in his face as he said Sire, my mission is to cure and not to kill, and he would not kill them. Napoleon, took the men and shot every one of them, and that was the beginning of his own downfall. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Excerpt from Transactions of the Medical Society of the State of North Carolina: Forty-Eighth Annual Meeting Held at Durham, N. C. May 21, 22 and 23, 1901 It is argued against the County Society that petty jealousies and disagreements of local competitors are sure, sooner or later, to arise and make the maintenance of the Society impossible.

Doubtless, this would be true in many instances, but even should the County Society disband for such cause, membership in the State Society might be retained, and in all instances these unfortunate conditions would not arise. With a well organized, active Society, the enforcement of the law would not be so difficult, and the tendency would be to increase both the membership and the attendance at the annual meeting. As a further means of adding to the interest of the annual meetings, it is suggested that more time be given to scientific discussion and less to routine business. As part of this program, it is recommended that each chairman of Section and the leader of debate be required to signify his willingness to perform the duties, and to assure him that the appointment is not intended as an idle compliment, but that the scientific WOrk and interest of the meeting will depend upon his efforts. If he is unwilling to give such assurance, then some one else should be appointed. It might be well, also to select some distinguished member of the profession from abroad to address each meeting on a subject of general interest. This book is a literal translation of one of the earliest and most important classics of Chinese medicine and natural science: the Shén Nóng B'nc'o J'ng ? or "Divine Farmer's Classic of Materia Medica." Compiled in the third century CE but undoubtedly much older in content, it contains information on 365 substances that were considered to have beneficial effects on the human body. Untold thousands of black North Carolinians suffered or died during the Jim Crow era because they were denied admittance to white-only hospitals. With little money, scant opportunities for professional education and few white allies, African American physicians, nurses and other community leaders created their own hospitals, schools of nursing and public health outreach efforts. The author chronicles the important but largely unknown histories of more than 35 hospitals, the Leonard Medical School and 11 hospital-based schools of nursing established in North Carolina, and recounts the decades-long struggle for equal access to care and equal opportunities for African American health care professionals. Others of us have been looking forward, with almost feverish anxiety, to the renewal of those old friendships which cluster around this hospitable community. This is the home of the lamented Pittman, whose generosity and love for this society have been perpetuated by a noble and gracious daughter. Every additional year has added largely to our numbers and influence, and of course our responsibilities have been correspondingly increased. The normal growth and development of our society has not been due to the adoption of any questionable methods. Those who have contributed the most to the permanency of this organization have always made its constitution the guiding star of their logic: The objects of this society shall be the advance ment of medical knowledge, the elevation of professional charac ter' and the promotion of all measures of a professional nature that are adapted to the relief of suffering humanity, and to im prove the health and protect the lives of the community.
