The Law, Practice and Procedure in Divorce as Applied in Pennsylvania Aug 28 2022

Families in Crisis in the Old South Feb 28 2020 In the antebellum South, divorce was an explosive issue. As one lawmaker put it, divorce was to be viewed as a form of "madness," and as another asserted, divorce reduced communities to the "lowest ebb of degeneracy." How was it that in this climate, the number of divorces rose steadily during the antebellum era? In Families in Crisis in the Old South, Loren Schweningen uses previously unexplored records to argue that the difficulties these divorcing families faced reveal much about the reality of life in a slave-holding society as well as the myriad difficulties confronted by white southern families who chose not to divorce. Basing his argument on almost 800 divorce cases from the southern United States, Schweningen explores the impact of divorce and separation on white families and on the enslaved and provides insights on issues including domestic violence, interracial adultery, alcoholism, insanity, and property relations. He examines how divorce and separation laws changed, how married women's property rights expanded, how definitions of inhuman treatment of wives evolved, and how these divorces challenged conventional mores.

Examining the Variations in and Relations Between Nonresidential Fathers’ Financial Contributions to and Involvement with Their Children Following Divorce Dec 28 2019

Divorce and subsequent changes in family structure can have far-reaching consequences for children. As a family’s total resources become split between two households, children are at increased risk for experiencing challenges related to reductions in financial support, as well as inconsistent emotional availability from their parents. In the final divorce decree, each parent has an (informal or formal) understanding of the financial support the nonresidential parent, who is most commonly the father, will provide to their former spouse to offset the costs of childrearing (i.e., child support), as well as the amount of time they will spend with their children (i.e., "parenting time"; visitation) on a regular basis. Unfortunately, research shows that some nonresidential fathers face challenges providing the financial and emotional support that help their children succeed long-term. Using monthly surveys from a sample of divorced mothers with primary residential custody, I first aim to describe the average trends in divorced nonresidential fathers' child support and parenting time in the first two years following divorce-filing. My second aim is to investigate the longitudinal bidirectional associations between divorced nonresidential fathers' child support compliance and parenting time to determine if changes in one form of fathers' support are consistently associated with changes in the other. Results broadly indicated higher rates of child support compliance and parenting time than previously reported, as well overall stability over time. Findings also suggested that child support may be related to fathers' abilities to pay support, while parenting time may be related to their abilities and willingness to stay involved. Finally, results largely demonstrated no reciprocal relationship between divorced nonresidential fathers' child support and parenting time. The present study suggests that divorced nonresidential fathers' increased contributions of child support may not lead to greater parenting time, nor will facilitating more parenting time necessarily lead fathers to contribute more financially in the long run. Child support and parenting time appear to be connected but distinguishable forms of support divorced nonresidential fathers provide to their children
