Her Final Prayer Oct 31 2020 Three empty chairs lazily rocked in the breeze, surrounded by scattered children's toys. In the yard, there were mounds of earth. Graves. Only big enough for children... When Detective Clara Jefferies is called to a ranch just outside of Alber, Utah, she's sickened to find two innocent young children murdered alongside their mothers. Their father, Jacob Johansson, has been rushed to hospital where he fights for his life. Blissfully unaware, his two-month-old son Jeremy has been left untouched in his crib. In the eyes of the community Jacob is the perfect, devout husband, seemingly living a peaceful, happy life. But Clara is certain that the crime is personal: one of Jacob's wives was killed differently, her lips painted after she died. Soon, Clara discovers photos of her in Jacob's best friend's trailer, and her flower necklace underneath the bed. When witnesses, including Clara's own mother, refuse to speak about the case, it becomes clear that loyalty to the community is more important than finding a killer at large. The people of Alber will never trust Clara; she may have returned home but they will always see her as the girl who abandoned her family. And yet Clara won't give up.
